March 7, 2019 / Clive D'Oliveira RIP

Clive D'Oliveira passed away early this morning, from cancer. He was just shy of his 64th birthday. Clive was a rigorous and thoughtful painter and an old friend we've known for many years. I think we met him back in the day because we had a mutual painter friend, John Howlin. Clive was part of a large group exhibition Sheila and I and Scott Childs worked on organizing back in 1995, called Strachan Project, and again in Big Show a decade later.

Clive was a man of strong opinions and he wasn't shy about telling you the straight goods as he saw them. I always enjoyed chit-chatting about art and the art world with him.

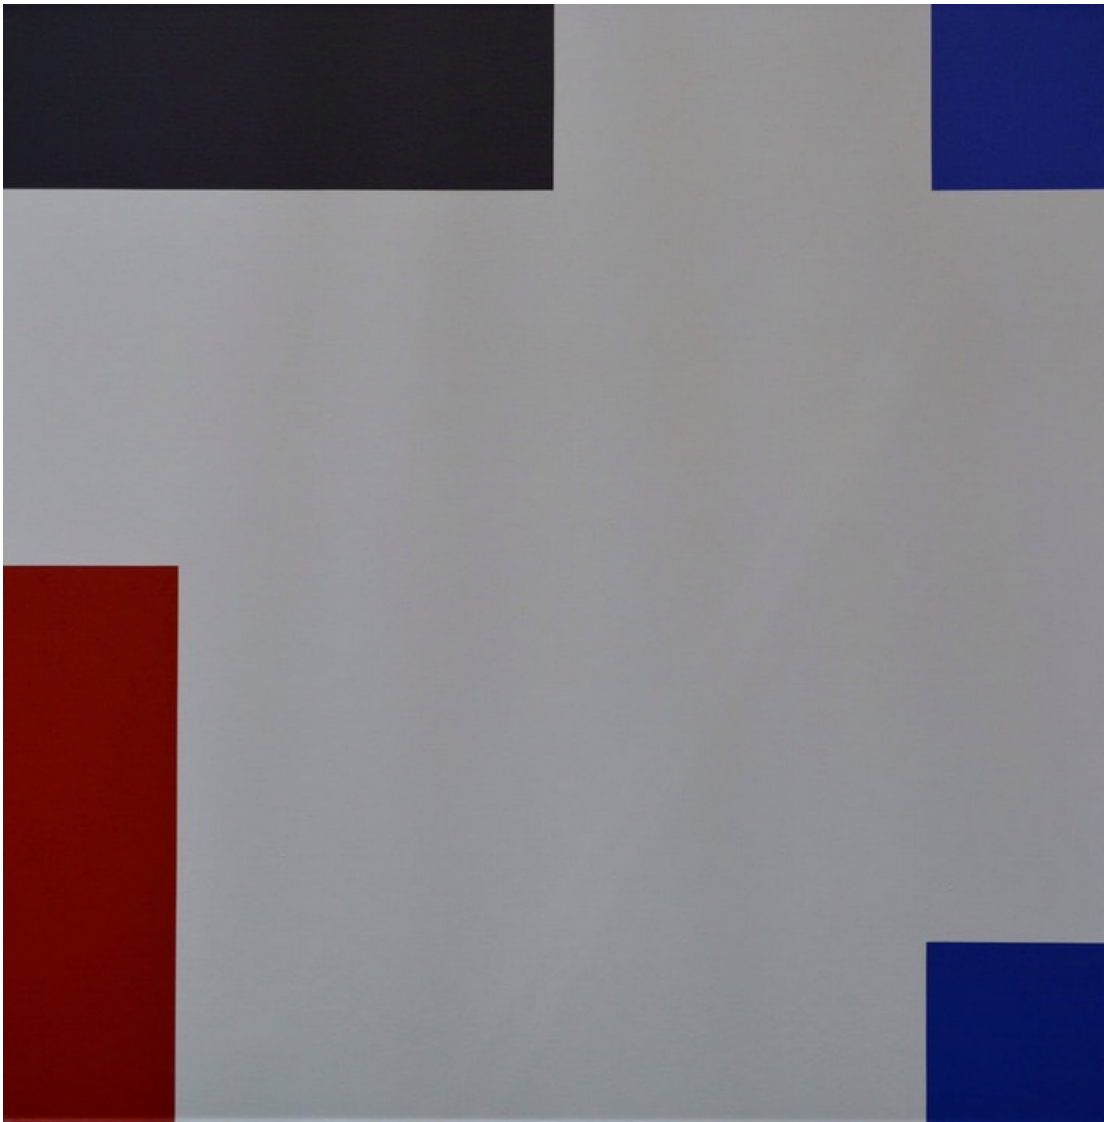

Archeton #6

I long admired Clive's work and his approach to painting, in part because it was so different from my own. I liked that he worked in series, that he did careful studies for his larger paintings, and that he explored his ideas thoroughly before moving on.

Rest in peace my friend.
